CAREER PLANNING IN ACTION

CAMPUS NOTES

Editor's Note. Most people know that unemployment, currently at 8.7%—the highest since 1941—is a serious national problem. Not until two or three years ago did a shortage of jobs seriously affect college graduates. That has changed and many seniors across the country will still be looking for jobs long after they graduate.

Lycoming recognized four years ago that our students needed to do a better job of career planning and to assist them in that and other related problems established the office of Career Development under the direction of Thomas C. Devlin, an associate dean of Student Services.

Because of its importance, we have devoted more than the usual space in this issue to the activities and efforts of that office. While we cannot assure students or their parents that all seniors seeking employment will receive job offers, we can assure them that we are very much aware of their problem and believe we have some solutions that can be helpful. The process must begin early—freshman or sophomore year—and not be ignored until the spring of the senior year. We believe we can be helpful to students who seek help early and are willing to accept advice.

The following article and two others provide more details.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

No longer can students attend college and expect to have numerous job offers awaiting them at graduation. According to the U. S. Department of Labor, it is estimated that 9.8 million college-educated persons will enter the labor market during the 1970's and that 9.6 million of them will be absorbed as follows: 3.3 million by replacement needs for persons retraining or otherwise withdrawing from the labor force, 3.3 million by expansion of employment opportunities, and 2.6 million by educational upgrading of positions that have not normally utilized college-educated persons in the past. (We don't know what will happen to the 406,000 unaccounted for in their statistics.)

In light of such predictions, it is imperative that college students become actively engaged in the process of career planning. Today's students cannot rely only on the merits of their academic background as stepping stones to employment. Careful academic and career planning are essential, and such planning should begin early in the college years.

A REALISTIC BLEND

At Lycoming, academic and career exploration are encouraged, not only as separate entities, but also as parts of an integrated process. That liberal arts and career preparation are compatible partners is a practical and realistic assumption. In other words, preparation for a life's work is possible within the framework of a liberal arts education. An undergraduate experience should provide students with the basic skills to establish a career identity, secure a place in the job market, and enable them to utilize their broad conceptual and problem-solving abilities to adapt to changing manpower needs.

A MORE COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM

Since 1956, Lycoming College has operated a Placement Office. Its primary function was to assist seniors in securing employment after graduation. Following the reorganization of Student Services during 1970-71, a full-time staff member was hired to establish a Career Development Center. Under the leadership of Thomas C. Devlin, Associate Dean for Career Development, Lycoming has built a career program which assists students, particularly underclassmen, in identifying and formulating their career directions, and assists seniors in implementing their post-graduate plans.

Beginning in the freshman year, the Career Development Center attempts to help students resolve questions that are important but often puzzling and perplexing. "What are my interests, abilities and needs? What major should I select? What are the career trends and employment outlooks? What can I do to better prepare for employment in my chosen field?" The first examination of these concerns occurs when the student obtains an entry interview with a career counselor. Here discussion focuses on helping the student clarify his/her career needs as well as develop a plan which provides a structure for fulfilling those needs. During this academic year 127 students participated in entry interviews. In addition, over 200 freshmen accepted our invitation to attend a thorough orientation session to the Career Development Center during the past year.

After the entry interview, numerous options are available to students to continue the career process. Students may participate in various career workshops such as value clarification, skill assessment and decision making. Each workshop consists of five to eight students who meet with a career counselor once a week for a period of four weeks. Presently, skill assessment is the most popular, where students learn how to relate their interests, abilities and needs to different career fields. Recognizing the need among students to have the opportunity to explore a variety of career avenues, Lycoming's program encourages investigation through a comprehensive and up-to-date career library, video-cassette presentations, monthly newsletters, and a speaker's program which brings people from various career specialties to the campus

DR. ERNEST D. GIGLIO, associate professor of political science and chairman of the political science department at Lycoming, has been granted teaching tenure by action of the executive committee of the college board of trustees, effective September 1, 1975.

Dr. Giglio has been a member of the Lycoming faculty since 1972. He received the bachelor of arts degree from Queens College, the master of arts from State University of New York at Albany, and the Ph. D. from Syracuse University.

He began his teaching career in 1962 at Syracuse University and in subsequent years taught at Dickinson College, Villanova University, and the University of Akron before joining the Lycoming staff.

Dr. Giglio is a member of the Mayor's Citizen Task Force of Williamsport and several professional organizations. He is president of the North Central Chapter, American Civil Liberties Union of Pennsylvania, and is the director of the Lycoming College Internship Program.

THE LYCOMING COLLEGE CONCERT CHOIR presented 10 concerts in 8 days during the choir's annual spring tour from Saturday, March 1, to Sunday, March 9, through 5 states and Canada.

The choir, under the direction of Walter G. Melver, professor of voice, performed in New York, Connecticut, Vermont, Maine, and Massachusetts, in addition to one appearance in Canada.

DR. EDUARDO GUERRA, professor of religion and chairman of the department will deliver the annual Summer Lectures at the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Mexico City, July 21-August 1. These lectures were established as part of a Continuing Education Program for clergy and lay leaders of Mexico and Central America. Dr. Guerra's topic is The Challenge of New Testament Theology Today.

GARY DARTT, theatre department, and ROBERT FALK, theatre department chairman, have been invited to present a special workshop at the Theatre Association of Pennsylvania convention at Bucknell University in April.

DR. ROBERT FALK has been invited to be a judge for the regional theatre festival next year (Northeast Region XII) and has also been invited to be a participant-presenter in a workshop at the American Theatre Association convention scheduled for Washington, D. C. next August.

DR. WILLIAM FORD, English department, has had two poems accepted for publication for the Fall, 1975, issue of Southern Poetry Review ("In Medias Res" and "Sleeping through the Peace").

weekly to talk with students. First-hand exploration of different occupations and professions is afforded students by the SHARE program. Participating students observe and work with professionals and other specialists on a daily basis for a period of time, giving students a real insight into the programs and solutions that characterize a particular field.

SENIOR YEAR EMPHASIS

During the student's senior year, the Career Development Center plays an active role in assisting seniors to secure employment or admission to graduate or professional school. Services include resume and interviewing workshops, government and job strategy seminars, "How to Find a Job in Williamsport!" program, and, of course, the nucleus of our placement service, individual placement counseling.

What happens to our students after graduation? Since 1972 the Center has been conducting comprehensive studies of our graduates' career patterns. Generally the picture shows that 14% enter professional/graduate schools, 36% private business, 6% government service, 12% the education field. Twenty-five per cent are underemployed or unemployed, or no information is available regarding them, and 7% miscellaneous plans.

Sue Birtz, senior, and a professional recruiter.

HOW ARE WE DOING?

Mr. Devlin responded to several questions. After four years of operation, how do you assess the effectiveness of the Career Development Center?
 "This year, for the first time, I am satisfied with the progress of our services. This is, however, little consolation when I fully recognize that there must be substantial growth if we are to meet the needs of all students."

What attitudes are being expressed by our students concerning the labor market for graduates?

"Generally, our students are no different from students at other similar institutions. From our counseling sessions we have noticed a number of attitudes among students which seem to parallel those of the changing labor market. Students are expressing a great deal of career uncertainty; students are experiencing difficulty in translating their educational credentials into employer qualifications; students are viewing as highly favorable the academic areas which provide applied skills; students are recognizing that there are restrictions to the type of career opportunities directly related to any one academic field of study; students are seeking opportunities for practical exposure to the world of work. Many of these concerns may be alleviated, however, our objective is to assist students put them in perspective by beginning to develop realistic, but flexible long-range educational and career goals."

Will the services your center offers ever be able to meet the needs of all students?
 "I'm optimistic, especially because of the recent developments which have enabled us to expand our services. First and foremost is the part-time assignment of career development responsibilities to Mrs. Kathy Brooks, Assistant Dean of Student Services. Kathy's presence has already been significant through her involvement in the Career Speaker Program, Career Planning Newsletter, and SHARE program. Second, the utilization of student counselors through the college academic internship program has increased the contacts possible. Third, the acquisition of a video-tape component system, made possible by the generosity of the 1974 senior class, has permitted us to increase the efficiency and quality of our services especially in areas of interviewing skills and career information dissemination."

STUDENT-COMMUNITY PROGRAMS

"If wish there had been programs like these when I was in college." This is the kind of comment we hear from people in the community who have become involved in our student-community career development programs. At the present time we have three in operation.

1. SHARE (Students Having A Real Experience) is a program in which student spend 3-4 hours per week for nine weeks matched with professionals already working successfully in their careers. The exposure to the work world gained through this experience allows the students to test tentative career choices early in the college years and organize their academic programs to best fit career objectives.

To date thirty-six community sponsors have taken part in the program and received career areas ranging from accounting to veterinary medicine. Student response to the program has been excellent, each semester more students apply than there are positions available.

2. CAREER SPEAKER NIGHT has also met with favorable response. In this program a different career is discussed every Monday evening by an individual from the community who is active in his/her profession. Such topics as academic and personal qualifications, methods of entry into the field, and daily responsibilities are covered in the hour-long session.

Students who are undecided in their career choice are provided with a brief exposure to a wide variety of careers through this program. Those who have selected their career area are provided with an opportunity to have specific questions answered by people already in the field.

3. COMMUNITY VOLUNTEER PROGRAM - This is the third activity and it is especially attractive to students who are contemplating careers in the social services. Students serve as unpaid volunteers and spend from one to six hours per week in one of eight community agencies.

The experiences students have in these different programs serve to confirm their career choices or to convince them that they should explore the field further in search of a more acceptable career. In either event, we believe the experiences serve a helpful purpose.

STUDENT INTERNS REACT TO PROGRAM

Throughout our experience it seems at the Career Development Center, numerous activities have impressed upon each of us the value of the academic internship program at Lycoming. Foremost our experience has been the practical application of the knowledge obtained in our classroom experiences, and techniques acquired in our training period, to an actual work situation. Although concern is expressed over students counseling students, it soon became apparent that in formalizing such a career program, students were easily able to establish rapport with student counselors, and openness and commitment became an integral part of the career interview. A new sensitivity arose in each of us as we responded to the unique personality of each incoming student.

Several other values have been impressed upon us during our internship experience. Encountering an actual workday filled with office hours and staff meetings demonstrated to us the importance of time schedules, and the need for both actual and physical preparation. Learning to work within an organization, receiving instruction and guidance from a supervisor, sharing ideas and experiences with the secretary were other facets of the internship program. We learned the value of a bluff approach as we shared experiences and concerns and utilized a referral approach to direct specific situations to a more specialized individual.

Our tasks and activities throughout the internship were essentially analogous, although each of us had an individual schedule to complete. Probably the most valuable was individual career counseling, customarily in the form of an entry interview designed to acquaint the student with the Career Development Center and to establish the beginnings of a career plan for each student.

In our work at the Career Development Center each of us has discovered the need for more contact with the process of career development. In today's world, making a single occupational choice may not be realistic.

tic for many students; therefore, preparation in a flexible career direction needs to be considered. Through our involvement in the academic internship program it has become evident that the services and programs offered by the Career Development Center are well suited to guide this process.

Interms in career development, Linda Kleib, Nancy Gerber and Nancy Beecher, ponder some common problems.
